Executive Summary

The oil from soybean MON 87769 (SDA soybean oil) is a sustainable source of omega-3 fatty acid that is intended to be added to selected processed foods. The purpose of this study was to calculate the intakes of stearidonic acid (SDA; 18:4 n-3) and SDA soybean oil from the proposed uses when either 20% SDA soybean oil or 30% SDA soybean oil are included in diet of United Kingdom (UK) consumers as part of selected processed foods. Inclusion of SDA soybean oil was set to achieve 375 mg SDA per serving of food, regardless of the concentration of SDA in the oil. The targeted inclusion level corresponds to 1.8 grams of 20% SDA soybean oil or 1.3 grams of 30% SDA soybean oil.

Daily consumption of selected foods was estimated from the UK's National Diet and Nutrition Survey (NDNS) for adults, aged 19 to 64 years. While the UK Food Standard Agency (FSA) has published information of typical portion sizes, this concept has not been translated into food nutrition labeling. Therefore, foods were matched to U.S. FDA serving sizes and the inclusion level of SDA in each of the targeted UK food categories was calculated.

The estimated mean adult population per capita intake of SDA from all proposed uses is 2.5 g/d (3.8 g/d at the 90th percentile). When intake was expressed on a bodyweight basis, the mean per capita intake was 33.0 mg/kg/day (51.2 mg/kg/day at the 90th percentile). The mean per capita SDA intake for adult males was 2.8 g/day (4.3 g/day at the 90th percentile), while the adult female per capita SDA intake was 2.1 g/day (3.1 g/day at the 90th percentile). The total dietary intake of 20% SDA soybean oil for the UK adult population was 11.8 g/day (18.5 g/day, 90th percentile) and intake of 30% SDA soybean oil was 8.5 g/day (13.3 g/day, 90th percentile). When the SDA soybean oil intake of each UK adult respondent was divided by their individual bodyweight, the total dietary intake for 20% SDA soybean oil was 0.16 g/kg/day (0.25 g/kg/day, 90th percentile) and for 30% SDA soybean oil was 0.11 g/kg/day (0.18 g/kg/day, 90th percentile).

The current result is an over-estimation due to possible inclusion of home prepared food which is not a target application of SDA soybean oil.

Background

The oil from soybean MON 87769 (SDA soybean oil) is a sustainable source of omega-3 fatty acid (18:4 n-3), that is intended to be added to certain foods to increase the omega-3 content of the diet. It is anticipated that SDA soybean oil will have a concentration of 20-30% SDA on a w/w basis of total fatty acids. As part of the product characterization, intakes of SDA soybean oil and SDA derived from SDA soybean oil, as a result of the proposed uses, were calculated to evaluate the nutritional impact of use of this product in the United Kingdom (UK).

Foods were selected by Monsanto's Food Applications scientist based on commercially-available foods already in the market with several omega-3 sources and broad categories that represent consumer interest or experience in functional foods. SDA soybean oil will be added to foods as a functional ingredient, in most cases replacing a portion of oil already found in those foods. These considerations, as well as categories that have been successfully formulated, were used to refine the list of foods. Certain areas were not included. As an example, frying applications were excluded due to the high polyunsaturated fat content. Due to the large number of double bonds, SDA is more reactive making it unstable in high heat applications (Sebedio and Juaneda, 2007).

National estimates

Dietary intakes of SDA soybean oil and SDA from that oil were estimated based on food consumption data from the UK's National Diet and Nutrition Survey (NDNS). The NDNS program is sponsored jointly by the Food Standards Agency and the Department of Health. The program is split into separate surveys conducted at approximately three-year intervals. Each survey examines a nationally representative sample drawn from different population groups:

- Children aged 1½ to 4½ years (UKDA, 1995)
- Young people aged 4 to 18 years (UKDA, 2001)
- Adults aged 19 to 64 years (ONS, 2005)

The adult and young people surveys provide seven days of weighted food records. The dataset for children provides four days of weighted food records. Each survey uses a stratified multi-stage random probability design. The sampling units are selected from within private households throughout Great Britain using postal sectors (UKDA, 1995; 2001).

Approach

The UK population SDA intakes were derived using the following approach with the UK adult (19-64 years) population data. The NDNS contains the foods reported to be consumed for each individual. These categories were compared against 19 broad food categories, referred to as food classifications (FDA, 2001), that have been proposed by Monsanto for omega-3 fatty acid enrichment with SDA soybean oil in the U.S. The UK NDNS categories were matched to the 19 classifications that make up the “SDA-targeted food groups” based on similarity of terms and then used to identify targeted food consumption groups in the UK (see Table 1 for UK food categories and the Appendix for a list of foods included in each category).

SDA soybean oil was produced that contained 20.7% SDA on a w/w basis of total fatty acids, referred to as 20% SDA oil, and 28.7% SDA, referred to as 30% SDA oil (Monsanto Studies: #07-PP-83-16; #07-PP-83-02). Calculations were conducted using these actual concentrations of SDA.

In estimating intake of a food ingredient, it is critical to understand the amount of the food ingredient added to finished foods as well as the serving size. Serving size of food products in the U.S. represents the amount of food that can be reasonably consumed at one sitting. The size of a serving is likely to vary between food categories. It is assumed that SDA soybean oil will be added to foods at up to 1.8 g/serving (20% SDA) or 1.3 g/serving (30% SDA) in order to deliver 375 mg SDA/serving. Portion sizes and actual portion sizes consumed and served have been published (Church 2008); however, the serving size concept has not been incorporated explicitly into food nutrition labeling. To estimate the SDA concentration to use with the UK food groups, the per-serving use rate (375 mg SDA/serving) was transformed into grams SDA per 100 grams of food (g of SDA/100 g of food) by assigning U.S. FDA serving sizes (FDA, 2001; Table 1) to similar UK food groups. The back-calculated SDA concentrations (as mg SDA/g food) were used in the assessment (e.g., for a food that had a serving size of 50 g, there would be 375 mg SDA/50 g food = 7.5 mg SDA/g food). When UK food groups were matched to more than one SDA-targeted food group, an average SDA concentration was derived for those food groups. All UK food items included in the calculations and their matched targeted categories are listed in the Appendix.

Estimated Intakes

The UK adult population (19-64 years) average and upper percentile weighted estimated daily intakes of SDA were calculated using only data from respondents with reliable dietary record data and reported bodyweights. Separate estimates were provided for adult males and adult females. Nearly 100% of the UK adult population reported eating a food proposed to include SDA; therefore, the per capita and per user estimates were identical.

Per capita estimates of the 7-day average and upper percentiles for the UK adult population's intakes of SDA (g/d) are presented in Table 2 and SDA intakes per unit of body weight (mg/kg/d) are presented in Table 3. The estimated mean adult population per capita intake of SDA from all proposed uses would be 2.5 g/d (3.8 g/d at the 90th percentile). When intake was expressed on a bodyweight basis, the mean per capita intake would be 33 mg/kg/day (51.2 mg/kg/day at the 90th percentile). The mean per capita SDA intake for adult males would be 2.8 g/day (4.3 g/day at the 90th percentile), while the adult female per capita SDA intake would be 2.1 g/day (3.1 g/day at the 90th percentile).

These calculations were based on a range of SDA compositions, 20% SDA soybean oil (actual = 20.7% SDA) and 30% SDA soybean oil (actual = 28.7%), each to be included at use rates to deliver 375 mg SDA per serving of food. The 20% SDA soybean oil would be included in foods at a use rate of 1.8 grams of oil per serving and the 30% SDA soybean oil would be 1.3 g of oil per serving of food to deliver the targeted amount of 375 mg/SDA/serving of food. The estimated amounts of each SDA-containing oil that would be consumed by the UK adult population were calculated on a g/day and g/kg/day basis for 20% SDA soybean oil (Tables 4-5) and for 30% SDA soybean oil (Tables 6-7). The total dietary intake of 20% SDA soybean oil for the UK adult population would be 11.8 g/day (18.5 g/day, 90th percentile) and intake of 30% SDA soybean oil would be 8.5 g/day (13.3 g/day, 90th percentile). When the SDA soybean oil intake of each UK adult respondent was divided by their individual bodyweight, the total dietary intake for 20% SDA soybean oil would be 0.16 g/kg/day (0.25 g/kg/day, 90th percentile) and for 30% SDA soybean oil would be 0.11 g/kg/day (0.18 g/kg/day, 90th percentile).

Discussion

The UK NDNS provides the total fat in each food, but does not provide recipe information (i.e., soybean oil content of foods). Therefore, which foods contained soybean oil and how much of a food consisted of soybean oil were not known. If a replacement analysis were to have been performed, numerous assumptions would have had to been made (i.e., fat variety, source of fat) along with calculations for each individual food to estimate how much of the fat in foods is able to be replaced (so as not to replace hydrogenated or endogenous fat). This lack of information made a “replacement” analysis not feasible. In addition, because recipe data were not available, it is not possible to evaluate the population’s baseline intake of fatty acids or the impact of including SDA on the population’s intake of the fatty acids. The NDNS survey does provide total fat, saturated fat, cis-monounsaturated fatty acids, cis n-3 polyunsaturated fatty acids, cis n-6 polyunsaturated fatty acids, transfat, and cholesterol for consumed foods. Calculating the baseline intake of fatty acids from soybean oil would require knowing the source of the fat in the food (i.e., soybean oil versus other oil, endogenous fat [e.g., meats] versus added fats). This information is not available in the NDNS. The conclusion was that the final results may have been erroneous or resulted in unexpected changes due to the nature of the data and the assumptions.

SDA soybean oil has a high content of total polyunsaturated fatty acids, including omega-3 fatty acids, SDA (18:4 n-3) and alpha-linolenic (18:3 n-3) acids (approximately 30%- 40% w/w of the total fatty acids) and omega-6 fatty acids, gamma-linolenic (18:3 n-6) and linoleic (18:2 n-6) (approximately 25-30% w/w of total fatty acids). This composition restricts use of SDA soybean oil from frying applications due to stability of the oil being undesirable. Furthermore, SDA soybean oil is intended to be used by the food industry for prepared/processed food and will not be available as a home-use oil. Therefore, non-fried processed food will be the only sources of SDA from MON 87769-derived SDA soybean oil.

In the current analysis, all foods in the SDA soybean oil targeted food categories were included without distinguishing processed foods and foods prepared at home and restaurants. By including foods prepared at home and restaurants, which will not have SDA substitutions in these SDA intake estimates, the results presented here are an overestimate and represent a maximum SDA intake. For example, entrees, gravy, and soups could be home-made, prepared at restaurants or processed commercially. The current analysis cannot separate the source of food consumed, therefore this analysis is considered an over-estimation.

In conclusion, introducing SDA soybean oil in selected foods in the UK would result in an intake of SDA for the British adult of 2.5 g/d. Intake of SDA soybean oil would be 11.8 g/day (18.5 g/day, 90th percentile) and 8.5 g/day (13.3 g/day, 90th percentile) for 20% and 30% SDA soybean oils, respectively.
